

Lets Talk, Really Talk – BKChat LDN, A Worthy Web Series

Have you not checked out the new web series BKChat London? Time to get familiar.

BkChat London is a new web-series based in London of millennials, some married, some not, who have controversial conversations about life, relationships, and society. The dialogues get pretty heated from this Nigerian and African descendant group yelling, "Let me finish, Let me finish."

They just wrapped up their first season on YouTube and are looking forward to a second after receiving much praise on social media. #BKChatLDN have Wednesdays going crazy on Twitter.

Founder of the British series, Andy Amadi, revealed to The Fader magazine that their wasn't enough TV to represent black British people. "There is simply a lack of content created for the U.K.'s BAME demographic. There is a real lack of diversity on TV, and that has helped BKChat spread amongst the under-served urban community. The cast members represent what people are going through.”

He launched the show last November, after years of working as a director for British television channel, BEN TV.

Each week, the group discusses relevant topics to many of London's youth including racism, body image and sexual partners. They've reached over 607,000 views and almost 100,000 subscribers in just a matter of months.

Their provoking talks and highly opinionated castmates, such as model Lucas Adeyefa, make-up artist Esther Falana, and Gogo (who are my absolute faves) each given an authentic outlook to the different topics.

Lucas never holds back and he's not afraid to state his opinion. Whether you like it or not, you will listen. He just does not give a damn.

On episode 4 titled, "Don't Ask Me How Many People Ive Slept With!," which received almost 500,000 views, Lucas made it clear to the woman that promiscuity is not cute. "If your fanny (sexual parts) does not connect to your emotions, you are a hoe, that's it." The girls addressed his comments about the double standard for men and women to have a limit on how many sexual partners they have in a lifetime.

Esther is my girl. She's real and in your face honest. Trust, there's no sugar coating on this show. She quickly called Lucas on being a liar about dating women who have had surgery, who may have low self-esteem, "You are a liar...I don't love myself any less than before I had my surgery."

Gogo is just the ultimate nobleman. He often plays the peacemaker role, providing compromises to each topic and seeing the positive in both side. Ah! Such a gentleman.

Amadi hopes to expand the series with more diverse cast members and other cultures, coming out with BK Chat Essex (North London) soon. "London is one of the most diverse cities in the world and it's important to portray a true reflection of that," Amadi told The Fader.

Check out BKChat LDN: Episode 1 – "He Broke Up With Me At A Bus Stop!"

here.

(Visited 6 times, 1 visits today)